Warning Flags: Dow Tumbles, S&P 500 Slides as Biotech Crumbles

By Ben Levisohn

Look out below! Stocks plunged this week, and you can pick from a whole grab-bag of reasons you're looking for a reason why, including the utter destruction of Biogen (BIIB) today.

The S&P 500 fell 2.2% to 2,079.65 after dropping 1.1% today, while the Dow Jones Industrial Average tumbled 2.9% to 17,568.53 after declining 163.39 points, or 0.8%, today. The Nasdaq Composite slid 2.3% to 5,088.63 after slipping 1.1% today. For the Dow, it was the largest weekly percentage decline since January.

Why did the market slide?

Pick a reason, any reason. While 74% of companies beat earnings expectations so far this quarter, just 52% have topped revenue forecasts, according to Thomson Reuters I/B/E/S. New home sales, meanwhile fell to a seven-month low in June. And commodities continued to “sink into a smoking inferno of death,” as New River Investments’ Conor Sen put it on Twitter. And the ultra-hot biotech sector tumbled after Biogen (BIIB) cut its guidance this morning, sending its shares tumbling 22% to $300.03 today. The iShares Nasdaq Biotech ETF (IBB) fell 4.1% to $377.58, and finished the week off 5%.

InvesTech Research’s Jim Stack argues that “warning flags increase” for the stock market:
